

As the strong winds of O stars and Wolf-Rayet stars have terminal velocities more-or-less equal to the Bohr velocity typical of bound electrons, a lot of charge exchange could and should be taking place in both single and binary stars. This talk considers how much charge exchange might account in particular for the X-ray observations of hot stars.